

Food Storage – The New Norm

Uncertainty

We live in a time of uncertainty. Food prices are skyrocketing. Grocery store shelves are being restocked daily but we still see shortages. It certainly feels like life is more influx than static.

Not a Time to Panic

Uncertainty does not need to create panic. Panic is a mindset and comes from a lack of preparation.

Food Storage is the New Norm

In the past we have thought of food storage as something to fall back on IF there is a need. In today's uncertain times it appears that as we go forward, we will look upon food storage and a well-stocked pantry as the new norm.

Hedge Against Inflation

Food prices have not gone down at any time in our lifetimes and that pattern is likely to accelerate. If we do not buy food today it will cost more tomorrow – availability continues to be an issue.

Convenience – Security

Regardless of our financial resources, great or small, having a well-stocked pantry can bring a great deal of comfort, a feeling of security, not to mention convenience.

Rotate

In the past we have dealt with the concern for rotating our pantry food regularly. In the future it appears that will be less an issue because we will be using it far more regularly.
